

GUN LAW TRENDWATCH

A ROUNDUP AND ANALYSIS OF THE LATEST STATE FIREARM LEGISLATION 3.19.2019

A new wave of gun safety legislators finally listened to the American public and delivered on background checks in 2019.

In the 2018 midterm elections, a record number of federal and state candidates promised to champion gun violence prevention if elected. Swept into office on a tidal wave of frustration and hope, many of these lawmakers are now delivering on their campaign promises by supporting legislation to close background check loopholes.

Currently, federal law only requires buyers to undergo a background check when purchasing firearms from a federally licensed gun dealer (FFL). While nearly half the states require background checks on some or all transactions between private individuals, dangerous people often buy their guns in the half of states that do not.

On February 27, the United States House of Representatives advanced H.R. 8, the Bipartisan Background Checks Act of 2019, which would mandate background checks for all gun purchases. The following day, H.R. 1112, a bill that would significantly extend the time period the FBI has to complete a background check, also passed the House.

One week later, the state of New Mexico enacted universal background checks. During the midterms, New Mexico voters replaced their governor with gun safety champion Michelle Lujan Grisham. Governor Grisham upheld her pledge to address New Mexico's weak gun laws, and on March 8, signed SB 8, which closes the private sale loophole and requires background checks on all gun purchasers.

According to a Quinnipiac University poll released this month, 93% of voters support requiring background checks for all gun buyers. It's long past time Americans had courageous representatives who are willing to stand up to the gun lobby and enact these and other lifesaving policies.

COALITION DEFEATS GUNS ON CAMPUS BILL IN WEST VIRGINIA

A determined coalition of activists, including students, faculty, and child welfare advocates, defeated HB 2519, which would have brought guns on to higher education campuses in West Virginia. The overwhelming majority of college and university campuses in the United States prohibit some or all types of gun possession, keeping most campuses safe havens from gun violence.

IOWA APPEASES GUN LOBBY; JEOPARDIZES RESIDENTS

On March 13, Iowa took another step towards jeopardizing even the most basic gun safety laws, such as laws that keep guns out of the hands of felons. HJR 13/SJR 18 could result in a state constitutional amendment that would mandate all gun laws be reviewed under the "strict scrutiny" legal standard, which requires judges to assume a law is unconstitutional until the state proves otherwise. Only three states—Louisiana, Missouri, and Alabama—have adopted the strict scrutiny provision, and these states have much higher gun death rates than Iowa.
